TARGET STUDENTS

This course has been specially designed for the so-called “legacy speakers”, those who through family interaction were raised in a country of non-Hispanic language, but in an environment of great cultural connection with Spanish. These students have grown up hearing and possibly speaking Spanish in their family environment, but they feel more comfortable speaking the official language of their country. However, they are highly motivated to improve their “heritage” language and seek a reconnection with their family roots. In many cases they have a good level of oral linguistic competence in Spanish (usually in conversational or colloquial registers), although they often lack sufficient schooling in their heritage language and often do not know its formal register, having acquired it almost exclusively in contexts and situations of an informal and family nature. Thus, the theoretical content and practical activities contained in this program are intended to cover, to a large extent, those shortcomings.
