

Post-Doctoral Researcher and Lecturer (f/m/d) in English Linguistics

The Chair of English Linguistics at the University of Mannheim (Germany) invites applications for a full-time postdoc position as a researcher and lecturer (f/m/d) in English linguistics (German scale TV-L E13 100%). The 3-year position starts in February 2020 and ends in January 2023. The successful candidate needs to have a Ph.D. in linguistics or a related field, with a specialization in psycholinguistic research. The Ph.D. must be in hand by the date of appointment or shortly thereafter.

The successful candidate will have a forward-looking research program with the potential to attract external funding. The chair offers basic financial support to start research projects and a supportive infrastructure, including e.g., an eye-tracking lab. The candidate must have demonstrated excellence in teaching. An overview of teaching experience and evaluations should be submitted as part of the application. The teaching load includes three 90-minute seminar courses in each 14-week semester in core areas of English linguistics as well as in psycholinguistics and/or applied linguistics. All teaching will be in English. The candidate is also expected to co-supervise BA and MA theses.

We offer you an innovative and international environment, with high quality of teaching in interdisciplinary bachelor's and master's degrees and excellent teaching facilities. Be part of a motivated, success-oriented and socially competent team, where you can assume responsibility, have opportunities for personal development and work on a diverse spectrum of exciting and challenging tasks.

The University of Mannheim is an equal-opportunities employer. Preference will be given to applicants with disabilities provided they have the same qualifications. The University of Mannheim strives to increase the proportion of women in research and teaching and therefore encourages qualified women to apply.
