

The University of Mannheim is a higher education institution with a distinct profile in economics and social sciences and an outstanding reputation in research and teaching. It is in these two fields that the university has repeatedly been ranked as one of the top research universities in Europe for years. The Business School is particularly renowned as one of the best in Europe. Located in one of Europe's largest baroque palaces, it stands for first-class research and teaching, promotes diversity and international collaboration and benefits from a high-profile network of business partners.

The Business School of the University of Mannheim invites applications to fill the permanent position of a W3 professor of business administration and taxation at the earliest opportunity. This professorship is intended to bolster the university's reputation in the field of corporate taxation and will play a key role in the expansion of a research center focusing on international regulation and taxation of capital markets.

Responsibilities:

- The successful candidate will represent the field of corporate taxation in research and teaching with wide-ranging economic questions that can be linked to various sub-disciplines within business administration. Ideally, there are links to the research focus area of sustainability regulation. They will mainly teach students of the business administration programs at undergraduate and graduate level, particularly English-taught classes.
- Contributing to the structured doctoral programs of the CDSB and the area of executive education is expected as well.
- A school-wide research center is to be established at the chair. The successful candidate is expected to lead it.

Requirements:

- Academic degree, doctorate, and habilitation or equivalent.
- Renowned researcher with a clear-cut research profile that evidently focuses on top-tier international publications in the field of business administration.
- Verified top-tier international publications relevant to regulation of taxation and tax transparency.
- Ability to actively contribute to leadership and representation of a school-wide research center. Experience in this area at leading international business schools is desired.
- Proven experience in teaching accounting and/or taxation in internationally renowned business administration programs at all relevant levels; the respective qualification is required.
